

Surgical Technology Students Volunteer in the Community

Cabarrus College students volunteer thousands of hours in the local community each year to benefit local non-profit agencies. Surgical Technology students demonstrated their enthusiasm this fall helping with a number of causes that have had a big impact on the community.

On Saturday, September 29, twelve students were up and ready to go early to help with the Carolinas Medical Center-NorthEast Walk from Obesity held at Concord Mills. Students Kristi Solomon, Crystal Black, Autumn Bryant, Brenda Hutchins, Abby Hulin, Karman Huneycutt, Karrisa Story, Keylah Derry, Judy McCarter, Alexandra Feldman, Katie Hall and Jennifer Puckhaber had a great time and helped to raise money for prevention, education, research and treatment of obesity.

The excitement from the morning carried over to the afternoon as students also volunteered that day with a project at Rowan-Salisbury Schools to raise funds for student supplies in the school assisting with concessions, inflatables and painting children's faces. The event raised approximately $3,000.

Upcoming events include a Fall Festival to promote family time and funding for 21st century products in the classroom for Bostian Elementary School and the annual Angel Tree project for 25 under privileged children in the Rowan County area.

Cabarrus College students are making a difference! Way to go Surgical Technology students!!
